

Property Loss Prevention

Working alongside and under the mentorship of an experienced Field Manager, the Engineers in the Property Loss Prevention group conduct comprehensive on-site risk surveys and analyze exposures. Their work helps AIG underwriters understand exposure levels such as fire and natural hazards that could cause business interruption and property damage. The Engineers may provide recommendations to help clients reduce and mitigate the risk of business impact from such exposures.

Product Line/Group: Global Property

This is a position that involves site engineering reviews of various AIG insured (or prospective) properties to assess the potential risk of property damage and business interruption from risks such as fire, wind, flood, poor management practices, etc. Analysis is primarily based on references to national and international engineering standards with engineering judgment. Part of this function also includes customer consulting on recommendation completion and new construction projects. Customers are both US-based and global. Site visits will be US-based; once experience is gained site visits may become global.

Responsibilities/Projects of Past Analysts:

- Site visits to various locations and industries followed by home-based office report writing about the visited property, any findings and ultimately the potential insurability. This information is supplied to AIG underwriters and account engineers for further review.
- Occasional customer meetings
- Phone conferences acting in a loss prevention/property conservation consultative role.
